1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand the preferences and behaviors of potential customers. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be unique and offer a clear value proposition. The third step is to create a prototype, which allows the team to test the concept and gather feedback from potential users. Finally, the product is refined based on this feedback and then launched into the market. Throughout this process, it is crucial to maintain open communication with the target audience to ensure the product remains relevant and valuable.

Figure 1 is a schematic representation of the experimental design. It shows two parallel vertical timelines for 'Control' and 'Experimental' groups. The 'Control' group timeline includes 'Baseline', 'Training', 'Transfer', and 'Test'. The 'Experimental' group timeline includes 'Baseline', 'Training', 'Transfer', and 'Test'. The 'Transfer' phase for the 'Experimental' group is further divided into 'Transfer' and 'Transfer'.

Figure 1. The 100 most cited articles in the field of the use of the Internet in the classroom. The figure shows a list of 100 articles, each with its title, author, and citation count. The articles are ranked by citation count, with the highest at the top. The titles are truncated for brevity. The authors are listed in full. The citation counts are shown in the rightmost column.
